

Spirituality is my strength in each day of my life. I start my day with prayers to my Creator, to bless me and help me to help others with their problems and struggles in their lives. I am devoted to what I believe and practice my traditional beliefs in every thing I do, day by day. I am respectful of my ancestors and honor them by following what the elders have taught me. In doing so, I am able to help other people, all people, whatever they believe, no matter what religion. I have peace and my spirit is calm, so I have total tranquility in myself. My devotion to prayers is guidance for my life and helps me to be very strong in whatever problems I need to face and deal with and to resolve them. My spiritual beliefs are very old and in practice and by doing so I am honoring my nation the Yoeme tribe (Pascua Yaqui.) I had a head injury in 2004, at which time while I was in a coma, I had a vision of heaven, and was told to "go back and change my ways." Shortly thereafter I learned I came back with gifts of seeing peoples' struggles and pain. After which I became a bible scholar. Later I was guided to pick up both the "white man ways" and combine them with the traditional Indian ways. I am Windraven, a Native American healer (also known as a Shaman, or Curando) of the Yaqui nation, and am honored to be such. I welcome anyone who needs healing or a blessing to seek me out and I will guide you on this path.
